End User Liscense Agreement

PHYSIS COMMERCIAL

Can I use the fonts to create a logo or other images?
Yes. You can use the fonts in any desktop program (such as Adobe Photoshop) to create images or vector artwork, which you can then use for any purpose. This includes generating a PDF, EPS file, or bitmapped file such as a JPEG or PNG.

Can I use the fonts for commercial projects or client work?
Yes. You can create digital designs or print work for your own use or for client projects. This includes generating a PDF, EPS file, or bitmapped file such as a JPEG or PNG.

Can I modify the look of a font and use it for commercial purposes?
Yes, you can modify or decorate type that you have converted to outlines. The resulting image may be copyrighted or registered as a trademark, or used in commercial products. You may not make changes to the font software file itself.

Does my client need their own font license to use the designs?
No, not if you are creating graphics or documents that have rasterized or properly embedded font data, such as a PDF, JPEG, or PNG. However, if your client needs to have the font installed to edit your design, they will need their own license, as a desktop license purchase.

Can I use the fonts to create products I will sell commercially, such as t-shirts, posters, books, magazines, or other printed merchandise?
Yes. You can use the fonts for any kind of merchandise, whether you're designing a t-shirt for a friend or product packaging for a client. Other printed products, such as books or magazines, are permitted as well. There is no limitation on the number of impressions or items you may produce.

Can I use the fonts to make stencils, stickers, jewelry, or anything else that features a single letter or glyph?
No. You may not create a product that is individual glyphs from the font files, e.g. an alphabet set of each letter to spell out your own phrase. Creating products from individual glyphs is not allowed in any format.

Can my customers use the fonts to customize the products I sell?
No. The font licensing does not allow you to use the fonts in any way where your customers select and apply font to their own text as part of the design. This applies to both digital and physical products, such as greeting cards, T-shirts, and coffee cups.
    You may create custom designs for a client on a one-to-one basis, but may not offer customizing products with fonts from your Creative Cloud subscription through a website or other service. Allowing your customers to create their own content requires a custom license, which needs to be purchased directly from the foundry or from an authorized reseller.

Can the fonts be embedded in PDFs and ebooks? Can they be used in printed books?
Yes. The fonts are licensed for embedding in any ebook format which protects the font data such as EPUB, iBooks, Kindle (mobi), and PDF.
    Any ebook authoring workflow which requires the user to move the font files themselves is not allowed under the Terms of Use, however.
    As with any electronic document, the fonts must only be used for viewing or printing existing content, not for creating new document variations, templates, or dynamic content.
    You may also use the fonts to create print publications such as books or magazines, but you are not allowed to package or share the fonts with designers or print bureaus.
There is no limitation on the number of impressions you may produce.

Do I need to credit for the fonts I use in my projects?
No. You are not obligated to include attribution for the fonts used in the documents or products you create.

Can I embed the fonts in a mobile or desktop application I'm building?
Yes. The font licensing does allow you to embed the fonts within mobile or desktop applications.

Can I embed the fonts in Flash files?
Yes. The fonts can be embedded in SWF files and AIR applications, when subsetted using authoring applications like Adobe Animate or Flash Professional. As with any electronic document, the fonts must only be used for viewing or printing existing content, not for creating new or dynamic content.

Can I use the fonts in the production of film or video content?
Yes. You can use the fonts to produce film or video content for in-house, commercial exhibition, or broadcast use. The fonts may also be used in video content which will be distributed online through services such as YouTube or Vimeo.

Can I install the fonts on my server?
No. The font licensing isn't compatible with server installation. You will need to purchase the appropriate font license for any fonts that you want to install on your server from the font foundry directly or the foundry's authorized reseller.